City Attorney finds job interesting, exhausting

By Joe Martucci

Ever wonder what the city attorney does?

According to Edwin Pear, the new attorney for the city of Ann Arbor, the position is "interesting, challenging, and involves an overwhelming work load."

Pear, 32 officially assumed the post formally held by Jerry Lax on June 15. Pear was graduated from the University of Michigan in 1963. He attended law school at Wayne State, and has lived in Ann Arbor since 1967. Pear began private practice in 1966, with the local firm of Ulrich, Sink, Lautheser and Pear.

While in private practice, Pear handled cases in civil procedure. This includes such matters as real estate, probate, corporate law and divorces. While there is a great deal of overlap, Pear says he is somewhat unfamiliar with some of the aspects of his new position.

The city attorney presently has the assistance of two full-time assistants, R. Bruce Laidlaw, and John Van Loon. Pear says a third assistant will be named shortly to replace Ed Goldman, who has resigned. Each member of the staff has an area of specialization, and the cases are distributed accordingly. The attorneys discuss their cases with one another at staff meetings.

Needless to say, a full-time staff of four attorneys is only warranted because of the large volume of work. Pear says his office is responsible for seeing to the needs of city council, representing the city in all ordinance violations (drunk driving, traffic violations etc.), as well as handling the needs of all the various departments in the city and dispersing legal opinions to these departments and private citizens.

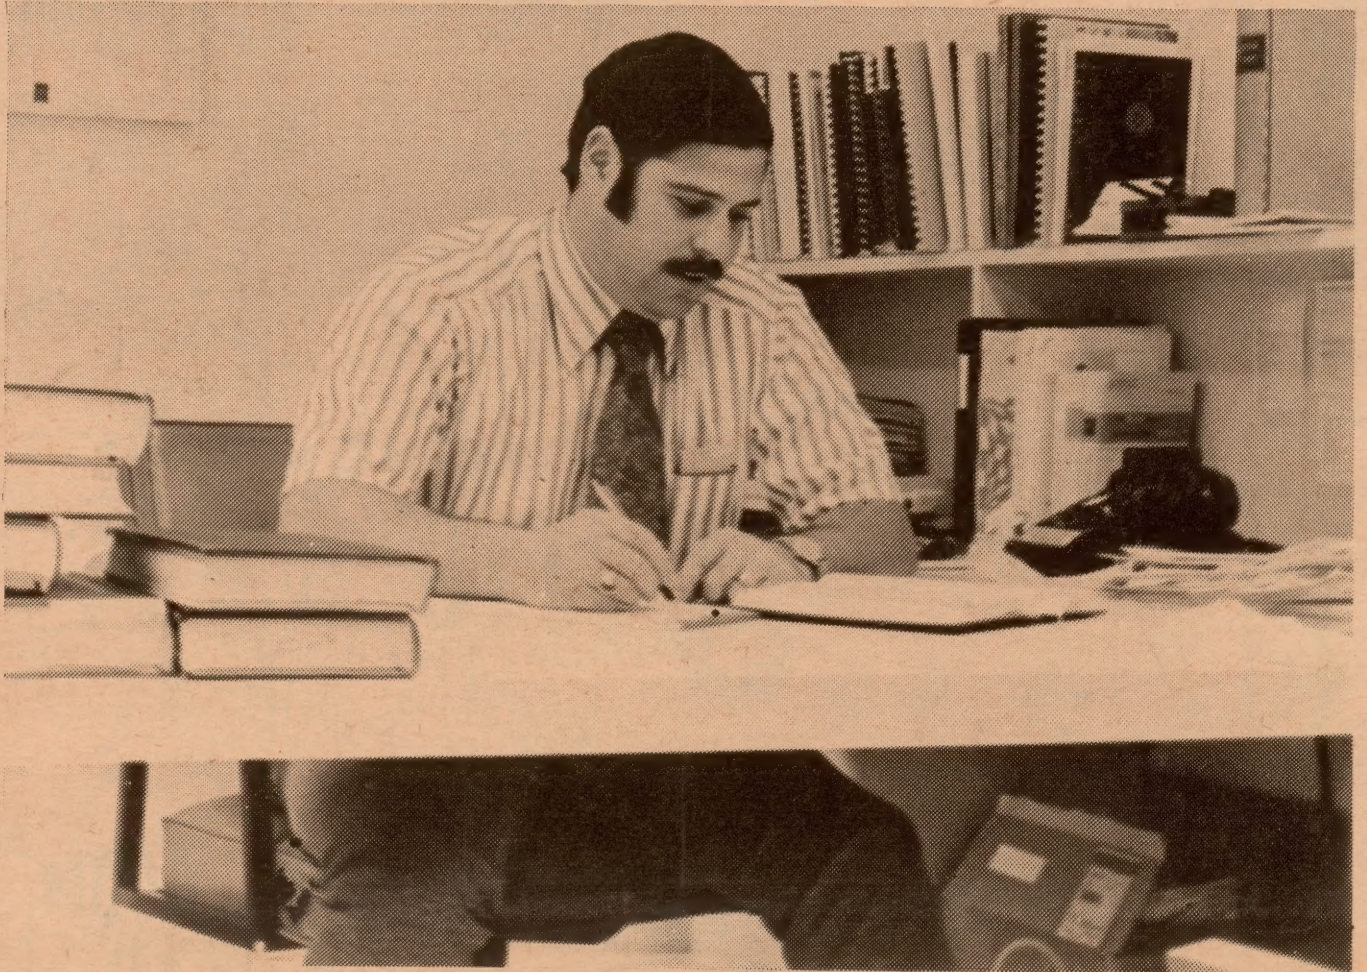

"My primary function is to act as attorney for City Council," Pear says. "This involves preparing for the weekly meetings and trying to keep abreast of matters as they arise. So far, I've tried to get a feel for what's happening by going over the files Jerry (Lax) has prepared."

Ideally, the office of city attorney should remain apart from partisan politics. Things don't work that way, however, as evidenced by Lax's departure after the Republican takeover last April.

"There's no question that this should not be a partisan office because we represent the people of the city of Ann Arbor," Pear says. "I personally am not a politically active person despite the fact that I was appointed by Council in a year when so many things have had political overtones. The law doesn't change with administrations."

Despite a completely new hierarchy at City Hall, Pear says the mechanism of local government continues to function smoothly.

"George Owers (acting City Administrator) has been in city government for quite a while. Also the heads of the various departments haven't changed. Everyone I've worked with so far has been very considerate of my newness to this position. I haven't detected any problems in the operation of the city," Pear says that the cases which receive the greatest amount of publicity represent only a small percentage of the total number of cases handled by his office.

The office participated in the litigation of approximately 1,000 cases last year, according to a staff member.

The City Attorney detailed the present status of four cases which have received considerable public attention, the Marijuana, Sign and Bottle Ordinances and the Ward Boundry case.

"The Sign Ordinance case is with the Michigan Supreme Court at the present time," Pear says. "Our office has filed briefs, and we're waiting for a date to be set at which we can make our oral arguments. After that, a decision will be handed down."

"The outcome of the Bottle Ordinance case will be of great significance. That decision could establish a precedent for other cases in the state," Pear says. "A Circuit Court hearing in front of Judge Deake has been set up for early next November. In the meantime we'll be in the process of getting information together and obtaining depositions so that we can make an effective presentation of behalf of the city. So far we've made inquiries of the plaintiffs (the store owners who originally filed the suit contending that the ordinance denied them equal protection)."

The Ward Boundry case has been kicked around as much as any other political football in recent years. Surprisingly, Pear says there isn't a great deal of law involved in the case.

"The city's position on the matter is to request that the plan be sent back to council for review," Pear says. We intend to plea nolo contendere (not to contend the issue) concerning some of the reputed errors in the census figures. Judge Deake will rule on whether the plan can be sent back to Council without another hearing."

If and when the plan goes back to Council, the boundaries will undoubtedly be redrawn.

A visit with a couple of veteran antique dealers

By Dennis Lampron

Sam and Clara Spencer have been antique dealers for the last 14 years, and if they could give people only two pointers on antique collection it would be "buy for quality and not quantity" and "always buy from established dealers when you are unsure of the item."

According to the Spencers, the last few years have resulted in a lot of fake antiques appearing on the market. "They will drive you nuts," said Clara, "There are just so many, and now there is even rumor that a lot of fake signing of once unidentified pieces, making them much more valuable if the forgery is successful. It is getting so they can reproduce just about anything. Some lawmakers are now trying to pass legislature that would force all reproductions to have some kind of permanent mark," she continued.

Despite the presence of some fake antiques, there is still a growing market for good antiques. "We can hardly buy to keep up with what we sell," said Sam. "Good antiques are selling, and each show we make, it gets better and we sell more," he continued.

The Spencers do most of their selling out of their home, but are starting to make more shows. "Many dealers are operating from show to show rather than assuming the high overhead of a store. Buyers also seem to find it easier to visit a show where there are upwards of 150 dealers assembled all in one place and they can pick and chose," said Clara.

How To Get Started

"I just like old things and have been collecting them all my life," said Sam, who is employed with Hydra-Matic in Willow

Sam and Clara Spencer take stock of the antiques in the basement of their home and store of the Valley Forge Antiques. (Advisor photo by Dennis Lampron).

Run. "I first started when I was about 9 years old and back then I didn't even consider that someday they would be valuable. I just knew that I liked them because they were old and had a history behind them," the 56 year old dealer said.

When Sam and his wife were married 17 years ago he introduced her to his hobby. "She would like to have had a heart attack when we used to go to the auctions or shows. She always worried that I was throwing my money away," Sam recalled.

Clara's reaction to those early days was, "He liked to have killed me trying to interest me in the old things. Now I love them as much as he does."

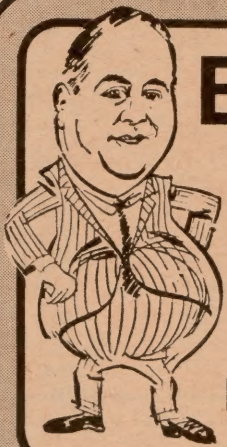

Like many antique dealers, the Spencers got their start as collectors. Eventually, after they had accumulated numerous articles, they obtained a license and opened up their house for business at 147 W. Ford Blvd. in Ypsilanti.

"When we made that move 14 years ago, we had so much stuff we didn't know where to put it all," Clara laughed. "We found out that the antiques we had been collecting were valuable and that other people wanted them, so we just started selling them."

According to the Spencers, antique collectors must be seriously involved with their work before they can become good sellers.

"You have to at least like the stuff you are selling," Sam noted, who has some items he wouldn't sell "no matter what the price." For example, he has an old powder scoop that belonged to his great grandfather, Major Biffle, which dates back to the war of 17 and 76.

A tour of Ypsilanti's Historical District

By Joan Bush

The State of Michigan recently added a 40 block area of Ypsilanti to the state register of Historical Districts. This same area will be listed on the national register probably some time this fall.

Prime movers in this listing were Ms. Jane Bird, chairman of the Historical District Study Committee, and Ms. Nathalie Edmunds, a member of the committee and a City Council member.

"We worked long and hard to complete this study and to have the area placed on the state register," stated the committee members. "Our next project is a city ordinance 'We worked long and hard to complete this study and to have the area placed on the state register,'" stated the committee members. "Our next project is a city ordinance which would establish an Historic District commission and which would help to protect Ypsilanti's historical buildings."

"Ypsilanti is architecturally unique," they explained, "most cities with homes dating back into the 1800s have several houses in a row which are almost exactly alike. We don't have that here. You can pick any spot in the 40 block area and see a variety of architecture. Greek Revival, Italianate, Victorian, plain homes and homes loaded with fancy cornices."

The two committee members took the Advisor's Joan Bush and Joe Martucci for a walking tour of some of the homes near the downtown area.

The Ballard Breaky House, 125 N. Huron, was built about 1830. It is registered with the Library of Congress as a building worthy of preservation.

Standing in front of Sesquicentennial Hall at 130 North Huron, more than a dozen historic homes, each one representing a different style, can be seen.

Sesquicentennial hall was built in 1858 and served as a private home until 1890 when Ms. Starkweather gave it to the Ladies Library association. On the lawn in front of the building is a plaque commemorating the Sesquicentennial of the City of Ypsilanti. The plaque is imbedded in a rock from the family home of Ms. Edmunds. Her family, the Elliots, has lived on this farm for six generations.

Across from Sesquicentennial Hall and to your left are the former home and office of Dr. Watling, a dentist. These are now in use as apartments. The white building with the pillars was built in about 1830 and is an excellent example of Greek Revival architecture. This building is registered in the Library of Congress as a building worthy of preservation. This building now houses the High School Educational Research Foundation offices.

The huge edifice at 203 North Huron was built in 1883 for Cornelius Cornwell, paper mill operator. It was the largest mansion between Detroit and Chicago and had the first city telephone and the first city water.

The city owns many of the homes on the side of the street with Sesquicentennial Hall. The former Quirk Home where Ms. G. Menen Williams lived as a child is now the district court house. The building housing the historical society was built in 1860. The city hall itself was built about 1860 by Daniel Lace Quirk, Sr. Standing behind today's city hall and looking to your left, you can see a gray brick building with some green trim. That is the site of the first city hall in Ypsilanti. The first act of the first city council of Ypsilanti was to authorize the building of this edifice.

"Adaptive Use" is a favorite expression of both Ms. Bird and Ms. Edmunds. It is impossible to maintain many of these buildings as private homes today. Some are too large and some located too close to downtown and the taxes become impossible for a homeowner to bear. Owners of the historic buildings adapt the buildings to today's needs. Thus is Landmark Realty at 105 North Huron is located in the Worden House built by Charles Worden in 1860. His wife was a dressmaker and had her shop in the building, but most of it was private residence.

The building at 118 South Washington which houses several social agencies is the Glover-Dixon House, built in 1893-85 at the cost of $32,000. Many of the craftsmen working on the home were imported from Europe. The original ceiling frescoes, plaster gesso and Italian tile fireplaces are still intact.

"We would like to see the city lease the Sesquicentennial Hall to a service organization which would in turn rent to other organizations which would meet in the hall," the historians commented.

"We have had the building checked and it is structurally sound in spite of a crack in the back wall which we think has been there since about 1868. A lot of renovation was done to open the building as the Sesquicentennial hall and we'd hate to board it up again now. The stained glass window over the entry way was given to the library by Ms. Starkweather. When the building is not in use, we store this window in the historical museum for safe keeping."

Head Start applications being accepted

Applications and referrals are being accepted for the 1973-74 Washtenaw County Head Start Pre-School Program. The program will consist of two centers (Ann Arbor and Willow Run) and a home-based program in which a teacher and/or aide makes a once-a-week visit into the home to work with the child and the mother. All of the supportive services available to Head Start children will be available to the child. The program which operates Sept. thru June is open to three, four and five year olds from low-income families. Preference is being given to four and five year olds who will be going to kindergarten in September of 1974.

Applications should be returned as soon as possible. Parents of those children accepted into the home-based program before July 16 will be offered an orientation workshop to familiarize them with Home-Based Head Start. Any applications received after July 13, 1973, for the Home-Based program, and July 31 for the classroom programs, will be placed on a waiting list unless there are still openings in the programs.

To make referrals, receive applications by mail or for further information, call Essie Calhoun at the Washtenaw Intermediate School District (769-6522).

The fire fighters of old Ann Arbor

Part 2

Last week on this page, we examined some early episodes in the history of firefighting in Ann Arbor. Established in 1836, Ann Arbor's Fire Department grew slowly during the next fifteen years. Engines supplemented the bucket brigades that had been the town's first line of defense against ravaging flames, but the brigades were still necessary to keep the engine's water box filled, and the first engines were pumped by hand.

Small engine houses, little bigger than sheds, were built in the village's two wards, north and south of the Huron River. To these sheds the volunteers would run when the bell in the steeple of the Presbyterian Church sounded the alarm of fire. Because they were volunteers, earning their livelihood elsewhere, the men were not in uniform when the alarm rang, and they were often challenged and insulted when they tried to direct the work of civilians at the fire scene.

Cisterns were built to supply the water used in subduing conflagrations, but the city fathers waited for an astounding forty-six years -- until 1882 -- before buying horses to pull the engines and the hook-and-ladder truck (which weighed 2,790 pounds). Not until 1888 was the first full-time fireman hired.

In a letter to the Michigan Argus in 1839, one fireman challenged a critic to "join the Company, and at the next alarm of fire be one of five or six to drag the engine (which weighs a ton) and ask citizens to take hold of the drag ropes and assist, and receive for answer, 'you be d-----d,' or 'go to h---ll,' and such polite answers, and he will feel the force of the insults."

Despite these early obstacles of village frugality and citizen complaining and indifference, the picture seemed to get brighter by the 1850's. A new engine house, with a meeting room upstairs, was built on the northwest corner of Huron Street at Fifth Avenue. It was a modest building, not nearly as handsome as the bold brick landmark that stands there now. A tower for drying hoses, added later at the rear, gave it a somewhat more imposing appearance.

Ann Arbor Fire Company No. 2, which had been organized in 1837, was dissolved, and reorganized on January 28, 1850 as Eagle Fire Co. No. 2, which adopted an almost identical constitution and bylaws, and held its meetings in the new engine house. The record book of Eagle Company has been preserved at the Michigan Historical Collections, and its pages tell a great deal of the life led by Ann Arbor firemen over a century ago.

The membership had changed in thirteen years, but the new members continued to be prominent in the town's affairs, including merchants William Wagner and Henry S. Dean, a hotelman and two newspaper publishers.

A uniform was chosen, a red flannel jacket with black and white trim, a leather belt, and a tarpaulin hat with elevated front peice bearing an eagle and the number of the company. The uniform was altered several times during the next decade, but the meetings held to a basic form. Roll was taken at the beginning and end, and fines assessed for absences from meetings and fires. Plans were made and reports read, and the men practiced with the engine to keep it (and themselves) in shape.

For several years, the Eagle men held a New Year's ball and organized picnic celebrations on the Fourth of July. But the men could easily be persuaded to swagger in their finery with no provocation at all. On December 18, 1850, after a regular meeting, "the company . . . formed in Torch Light procession and after marching around about one and a half hours returned to the Hall." (The march, incidentally, violated several provisions of the fire prevention ordinance of 1834, Ann Arbor's first public safety law.

law.) Ann Arbor was incorporated as a city in 1851. When our first mayor, George Sedwick, brought the new city charter back from Lansing, the firemen met his train and escorted mayor and charter to the courthouse square, led by a brass yesterday-

By Wystan Stevens

band. Charter status brought with it a new Fire Department ordinance.

No fifths on the 4th

Eagle Company had to reorganize itself to obtain recognition from the city. Henceforth it was to be Eagle Co. No. 1. By this time, the volunteers in Lower Town were known as Huron Co. No. 1. Eagle Co. invited them and the new Relief Co. No. 2 to an Independence Day picnic. It was to be a chaste affair, if the minutes can be believed: "Moved, that we shan't have no liquor brought into this Hall on the fourth of July, which was carried." The wets, thwarted, evened the score with a counter-motion: "Also, that we shan't have no lemonade brought into this Hall on the fourth of July, which was carried."

The old Ann Arbor Engine House, built around 1850, was a Huron Street landmark for over thirty years. Fire hoses were hung to dry in the tower, which was added in the 1860's. In 1852, the desk containing the city library was moved from the upstairs room to the one below. This picture was taken from the Courthouse tower in 1879. (Photos courtesy Sam Sturgis Collection.)

In 1852, a newly-formed hose company petitioned to be admitted as a branch of the Eagle Company. They were accepted as Eagle Hose Co. No. 1. The old engine was now a wreck, in need of constant repair. A new one was ordered which the Michigan Central Railroad shipped free from Chicago. It was received with great pride and ceremony. So pleased were the Eagle boys with their new engine that when they traveled to the state fair in Detroit the next year, they took it with them to show off the the Detroit firemen. Substitutes were recruited to serve their two-day absence; luckily, no fires occurred.

Eagle Company continued happily until 1856. In March of that year, no quorum was obtained. In April, May, and June, only the secretary was present at meetings. Then he moved to California. A new company with the same name and number was organized on July 11, 1857, and soon torchlight parades were being held again.

In 1858, the company, bothered by lack of privacy in the engine house, which was shared for meetings by other fire companies, asked for a new engine house or permission to move the engine if they could find another house. The city had no objection as long as the men paid for the house. The matter was dropped. Money problems plagued the company, and a dance was held in 1860 to pay off debts. Although it was a success, interest waned, and the company died again.

Yet another Eagle Fire Co. No. 1 was organized on March 2, 1864, and disappeared for good a few years later.

Other companies were having their ups and downs before, during, and after the Civil War. Deluge companies 1 and 3 appeared, and Hook, Ladder and Axe Co. No. 1, which had its headquarters on North Fourth Avenue between Catherine and Beakes. (It was later moved beside the city engine house.) A consitional petition was granted for organization of a Hand Fire Engine Co. Protection Fire Co. was recognized about 1870, as was (in an apparent bow to women's liberation) Ladies' Hose Co., although it didn't last long.

Is the library burning?

Mayflower Engine Co. No. 76 was organized in 1865. The name (and possibly the number) were on the engine when it arrived a gift of the Michigan Central Railroad. The trademark was promptly adopted as the company's nom de guerre. On July 4, 1865, the Mayflower hand engine was decorated with floral wreaths and ribbons by the firemen's wives. Imagine the dither and embarrassment when the fire alarm rang and the men could not work the engine, encumbered as it was with posies and bows. The decorations were hurriedly snatched off, but the fire had a raging head start. It totally destroyed the building on North Fourth Avenue which housed the Misses Clark School, and with it, 1068 books owned by Mary Clark -- the largest library in town, after the University's. The weary firemen returned to the celebration hours later, sans plumage.

The Relief Fire Company had its own park, on West Madison Street, right beside the German Turner Park. Now known as Wurster Park, the site was supervised by the Relief Park Association, organized on August 19, 1867. Frederick Schmid was the association's president in 1883. The secretary then was Ottmar Eberbach, whose father Christian had been treasurer of the city's fire department a decade earlier. Other officers and most of the members of Relief Fire Company were of German descent. On August 16, 1877, the Michigan Argus advised its readers that "a new fire company has been organized, composed principally of citizens of the German persuasion, and the boys will run with the Relief machines." This was really a reorganization, not a new company, and we may be sure that the boys "of the German persuasion" sipped more interesting liquid than lemonade during their picnics in the park.

Another volunteer company of the era was largely staffed by Irish-Americans, and a keen rivalry developed between the two nationality groups. The competition may have been an asset to property owners, as the compaies raced each other to fires. But sometimes friction grew so intense that they forgot their real mission, drenching one another instead of the flames.

No ladies at the lake

Firefighting was hard work, and hot, and the rough-and-ready volunteers did not begrudge themselves occasional refreshment. The Eagle minutes book records a payment of $3.50 for liquor, presumably quaffed at the New Year's Ball. The minutes book of Defiance Hook and Ladder Company No. 1 has also been saved. On June 7, 1877, members planned a trip to Whitmore Lake, and a motion was made and carried that "when we go to the Lake we take no ladies." They meant to throw decorum to the winds.

In 1865, a student at the University, writing to the folks back home, captured for them and for us a revealing glimpse of the gusto with which the volunteers attached their work, and each other. "Our town," he wrote, "was thrown into as much excitement the other evening by the burning of a barn as New York would have been by the destruction of a whole Square. It was the first fire of the winter & students worked side by side with the 'roughs' on the engines, and drank out of the same whiskey barrel. After the fire was partially extinguished and a neighboring block of houses secured from danger -- all hands indulged in the luxury of a free fight, which I did not remain to witness, as I escorted a lady to the scene." One detects, perhaps, a note of disappointment.

The company minutes that have been preserved tend to ignore the serious aspects of the fireman's work, concentrating instead on plans for dances and excursions and the parliamentary rigamarole connected with the election of officers and the admision of new members. How did they feel about the dangers they faced? The minutes offer no insights. Instead, wer find delightfully frivolous entries such as the

Manchester Chicken Broil set for July 19

By Marie Schneider

Manchester's 20th annual char-coal Chicken Broil is set for Thursday, July 19 at the High School Athletic Field. Serving is from 4 p.m. to 8 p.m.

Its "20 years of Hustling" for the men and boys in the community of 1,700. Always, the third Thursday in July visitors get the red carpet as they nibble on golden brown chicken and get greasy fingers.

The 450 men and boys are prepared to serve 11,000 at this the largest of its kind in Michigan. Jaycees and Optimists round up the working force which includes farmers and business men in the rural community. 20 miles southwest of Ann Arbor on M-52.

Luther C. Klager and Rolland Grossman are general chairmen--same as at the first broil when 1,500 were served. It takes 450 to man the Big Broil and everyone helps. Business places and all workers have tickets. Get tickets early and save a quarter. They are $2.50 at the gate.

Four hundred-foot-long char-coal pits broil 1,500 halves at a time and twenty-eight pairs of white gloved hands turn the grids 60 times in the hour-and-a-half of broiling. The birds are lightly salted and spraying equipment and a bucket of melted butter move carefully along the rows of chicken. A sight to see.

Dr. Howard Zindel of the Poultry Department at Michigan State will be here to watch and supervise the broiling which he perfected twenty years ago. He has a perfect attendance record for engineering the Manchester Broil. Five checkers will twist the leg bones to be sure the chicken is done.

Its a gala event and loud speakers will herald the arrival of guests from away and foreign countries. Nearly all of the States are represented. Many make plans a year in advance to be here the third Thursday in July. Family reunions see more of the hostess for she doesn't have the cooking detail. There are two take-out lines. Workers have assembly line efficiency as they quickly fill the boxes.

Quite a dining room as 2,500 can be seated at a time. Trimmings for this big dinner include about 70 gallons of specially prepared dressing which is mixed days earlier. German kraut cutters slither up two ton of cabbage as it is used. Bags of potato chips, crisp red radishes, buttered rolls and coffee or milk are included. Pop and ice cream are available.

Profits this year will be used to pay the debt on Kirk Park which was bought with Chicken Broil money. The park is converted from a village dump. Many improvements have been made possible for the youth of the community by the Chicken Broil. That is the reason for the broil--to benefit the young people. On them the community depends. That was the intention of the first broil and the reason farmers and businessmen close shop and work for the success of the Broil.

Carr Park Shelter, lights for the Athletic Field, playground equipment of all kinds, new files and shelves for the library, fencing for the Athletic Field and now buying a new park are some of the improvements by "twenty years of hustling."

At the first big Broil some 1,500 were served and the workers with blistered hands and sore feet counted the money and proclaimed the dinner a huge success. The Broil grew!

The Sheriff's Department's Mounted Division will direct traffic. There's free shuttle bus service to and from the parking areas. Visitors from most of the States sign the guest book.

People enjoy the scenic route to Manchester away from the hustle and bustle of the city. Manchester has preserved the best of the past and moves ahead with an eye on the future. Those here for the first time drive around the shaded streets. They stop at Main Street's new bridge over the Raisin and look at the Red grist mill that still uses water power. Original brick buildings flank Main Street.

Two soft ball games will furnish entertainment for the crowds and viewers fill the bleachers.

The Broil keeps the community working together. When the last visitor has walked away satisfied and things are pretty much cleaned up once more the workers will set down and talk things over at Carr Park. They'll begin making plans for another broil next year as they munch on bologna sandwiches. They've seen enough chicken for a while.

Each worker received his instructions through the mail earlier this month. There is a familiar paragraph that old workers remember from the first Broil. This tells the secret of the Big Broil. "Workers will relax at Carr Park Shelter after the last ember has died. Please do not relax on the Athletic Field."

All-City swim meet to be held

By Joan Bush

The annual all-city swim meet will be held July 16 (July 17 in case of inclement weather) at Fuller Pool. Finals begin at 6 p.m. Winners in all events will qualify to compete in the Michigan Recreation and Parks State Swimming and Diving Championship Meet for City Champions in Flint on August 4. Second, third and fourth place winners may attend by invitation only.

Entries will be made on the day of the meet. Contestants are limited to three events. Howard Patthelf says that the age qualification rule is, "A swimmer who will not reach the next age classification as of Sept. 1, 1973 is eligible to compete." The eight best times in each division will compete in the finals.

Ten and under and 11-12 years will compete in the 50 meter free style, backstroke, butterfly, breaststroke and the 100 meter free style. These swimmers will begin qualifying at 1:30 p.m.

Swimmers from 13-17 will qualify starting at 10 a.m. Options for the 13-14 year olds include 200 M free style (boys only), 50 meter breaststroke, 50 meter backstroke, 50 meter free style, 200 meter individual medley, 100 meter free style and 50 meter butterfly. The 15-17 year olds will compete in 200 meter free style (boys only), 100 meter breaststroke, 50 meter free style, 200 meter individual medley, 100 meter free style, 100 meter backstroke and 100 meter butterfly.

Diving competition begins at 4 p.m. Ten and under and 11-12 age groups will perform one required dive and three optionals out of at least two groups. Youngsters 13-14 years old will perform one required dive and four optionals out of at least three groups and swimmers 15-17 must demonstrate proficiency in one required dive and five optionals out of at least four groups.

The novice swim meet will be August 11 at Huron High School. This is open to any swimmer who has not placed second or better in any meet this summer.

Perhaps no issue has ever polarized the community as much as marijuana. The repeal of the five-dollar penalty ordinance passed by a formally Democratic-HRP council had its first reading before council on May 21. The issue has also been the subject of a public hearing.

"The proposed ordinance to repeal the five dollar penalty has to come before Council one more time," Pear says. Two hearings are required before Council before an ordinance can be passed."

Pear leaves little doubt that the liberalized penalty will be repealed in short order.

Pear appears as though he wasn't expecting the work-load he is encountering. However, he seems excited about his new position and says the work is "interesting, challenging and diversified." He adds that he enjoys being at the center of a decision-making process which effects a large number of people.

"The only drawback is that the magnitude of problems is so great," Pear says. "There's no way to limit the number of cases you handle and decisions you have to make. Sometimes you feel like a fireman."

Ann Arbor Art Fair to feature 250 artists

Defying wind, rain and high humidity, the Ann Arbor Street Art Fair will happen again this year beginning on Wednesday, July 18, and running until Saturday July 21.

The 14th annual Ann Arbor Street Art Fair will feature the work of 250 invited artists and craftsmen from thirty states, Canada, and this year, a visiting artist from England. Virtually every bonafide art medium can be seen at the Fair as well as demonstrations of glass blowing, wood-carving, weaving, ceramics, welding, jewelry, enameling, painting, and acrylics. The demonstrators are a highlight of the fair each year, particularly for children who watch transfixed as the artists create their works.

The Art Fair takes place on South University, a busy business district bordering on the University of Michigan campus. Planning and coordination for the Art Fair has become a year-round job, which is the work of the fair committee made up of members of various sponsoring organizations such as the Chamber of Commerce, the Ann Arbor Art Association, and the University of Michigan. The South University Businessman's Association is directly responsible for the most crucial task of all, the construction, maintenance and dismantling of the booths. Volunteer businessmen and their recruits work long hours setting up the ten foot square booths which span the length of South University and half of East University. Efficient and enthusiastic, these men have contended with summer rain storms and damaging winds nearly every year that the fair has been held. Last year, after the booths had been erected, covered with a visqueen roof, and wired for electricity, a short but violent windstorm blew many of them down. Undaunted, the crew went back to work and the booths were up again and ready to be occupied in a matter of hours.

The Ann Arbor Street Art Fair has been consistently rated as one of the best in the country. It began almost spontaneously in 1959 with nothing more than ropes strung between parking meters and 145 artists. Despite its disorganization this early fair embodied many of the qualities which have continued to distinguish the Ann Arbor Street Art Fair. It provided a chance for the public to meet, view and buy original works from professional artists. Even then its emphasis was largely educational with demonstrators playing a large role.

By 1963 the Fair had almost outgrown itself when 363 artists tried to squeeze into the available space. A decision had to be made. Would the Fair grow in size or in quality. The Art Fair Committee decided to limit the size of the Fair and maintain a high quality of art work. The 1965 fair was the first juried fair. Each April, a committee of at least eight persons view the slides of the nearly 1000 applicants. This committee has the difficult job of narrowing the number of participating artists to 250. This system assures that the work exhibited will be the best available.

The art form of entertainment is another highlight of each year's fair. The dramatic and musical offerings are always plentiful. Included in this year's schedule will be selections from "Roar of the Greasepaint, Smell of the Crowd", by the U of M players, a performance by the Junior Light Opera, Belly Dancers from Art Worlds, a Mime-studied under Marcel Marceau, and selections from the Civic Theater's upcoming production, "Company" and "Kismet".

As in the past a children's activity area will be featured at the fair. This area is supervised during the day and is usually bustling with young people creating their own works of art, many of which will be displayed.

Other attractions include the booths of the Ann Arbor Potter's Guild, high school students, and senior citizens. This year a slide show depicting the background and highlights of the Fair will be shown.

In conjunction with the Ann Arbor Street Art Fair, the 21st Annual Invitational Conference and Exhibition sponsored by the University of Michigan, will be held on July 19th. Lectures and demonstrations on oil painting, watercolor, and acrylics will be held on campus. The work of invited artists from fifty Michigan cities will be on display at that Rackham Building.

Visitors to the Ann Arbor Street Art Fair can take a little of the atmosphere of the fair home with them. A comprehensive book featuring pictures of the works of artists as well as biographical information and a pictorial history of the show will be available. The book has been published by Wallaby Inc. and Ann Arbor based Advertising and Public Relations firm which is retained by the Art Fair Committee to coordinate the various fair activities. Wallaby also handles all publicity and advertising for the fair.

The Ann Arbor Street Art Fair will be held from July 18th through July 21st, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday and 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturday.

Watch for future stars at Junior Olympics

By David Rigan

The fourteenth annual Junior Olympics for boys and girls fifteen years old and younger will be held on July 12. The event is sponsored by the Ann Arbor Recreation Department and the Noon Optimists.

If the past is any indication, there will be some great performances from future stars in the various track and field events held at Ferry Field. The running events are limited to dashes - 100, 50, and 25 yards - and relays. Field events are more varied and include the bent arm hang, softball throw and hop, step and jump (commonly called the triple jump).

Many of the past participants have made names for themselves in athletic competition on the high school and college level. The most prominent name is probably Bob Elliott who was a standing broad jump champion and current record holder for that event. He continued his career in track as one of the best shot putters in the state. Needless to mention, he also plays basketball fairly well.

Two other Elliott boys, Bob and Bill, were perennial stars for Burns Park according to Mike Milidonis, former supervisor at Burns and director of the Junior Olympics for the last five years. These Elliotts are sons of former Michigan coach, Bump Elliott. They performed for Pioneer High in football and other sports and continued their competitive careers in college.

Milidonis recalls some other performers and performances. Carlton Daniels holds the record in the running long jump and continued in that event at Huron High. Ann Eiseley was a softball champion and record holder who became a park supervisor. Roberta Zald, another record holder, was third in the state in the shot put for Pioneer High this spring. Mel Embree holds records in the hop, step and jump and high jump. Mel continued as a leading high jumper for Huron High. Johnny Jones, an ex-chinning champion competed for Huron in wrestling.

The quality of the young athletes competing in the Junior Olympics is evident from the past examples. Ann Arbor has competed in the Detroit Metropolitan Meet for the past nine years and finished first in the unofficial point standings last year for the first time. The quality of Ann Arbor's athletes is obviously increasing. The number of records broken in the past couple of years is another indication of better performances according to Milidonis.

Despite all the great performances and the large number of superior athletes Milidonis emphasized that there is also a lot of room for the ordinary youngster who is just interested in running or throwing a ball against other ordinary kids in an enjoyable atmosphere. The emphasis, says Milidonis is on fun and recreation rather than tight competition.

Sometimes too, these ordinary youngsters come up with extraordinary efforts. Three years ago Tammy Johnson, an eleven year old girl, finished third in the standing long jump. The first and second place winners couldn't go the Detroit meet so Tammy went just so Ann Arbor would have someone competing in every event. She not only competed but jumped six feet seven inches which was good enough for the first place trophy.

Even in the Ann Arbor meet there is sometimes the drama of the real Olympics on a lower level. In last year's 50 yard dash for twelve and thirteen year old girls, Sarah Peterson, a small twelve year old won her preliminary heats. In the finals she ran against girls who were almost a foot taller and twice her weight. When it was over, Sarah had finished in a dead heat with one of the other girls. She was behind until the finish, but dove at the finish line in a desperate effort that achieved the tie. The two girls ran again to determine the champion. Again it was a dead heat. They ran a third time and the other girl won by an eyelash. Sarah was declared the winner, however, when it was found out that the other girl was going to be fourteen years old before September first and therefore disqualified. The joy on Sarah's face was matched by the bitter disappointment of the other girl.

It's a wonder, but despite the excitement and opportunity provided by the Junior Olympics, the interest and participation has gone down in the last five years. Part of the reason is lack of funds to provide buses to transport kids from all parts of town according to Milidonis. He and the other directors feel that this should be rectified by the School Board, but because of budget cuts they are not optimistic.

Another reason for the decline in participation is that in previous years kids competed for the park they usually attended and everyone who competed got at least one point for the park by merely competing. Team standings were kept and a winner declared so every kid could feel he was contributing to the team effort. Last year was the first year without team competition and without any buses, and despite many new records participation was down from past years.

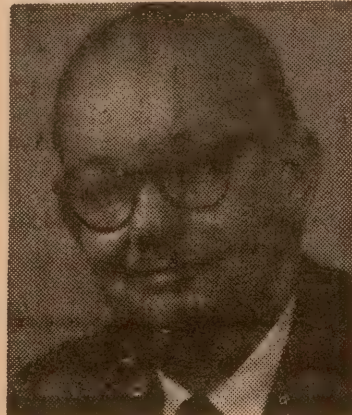

In order to increase participation Milidonis and the others involved are planning to expand the number of events to include longer distances and more field events. There is also a possibility that they will go back to park competition next year. There is little chance that buses will be available, however, because the money is just not there.

The Junior Olympics is always exciting as competitors and spectators alike can verify. If you are fifteen or younger, or have a child who is interested in track and field events, go to the nearest park and ask for details, or go to Ferry Field on July 12 at 9:30 a.m. and you will see some of Ann Arbor's kids in action. You will undoubtedly see some future stars making great performances. Who knows? Maybe you will be one of those stars.

Ms. Edmunds compiled a walking tour guide of the historic homes in the downtown area. This guide is available at the museum or at the Huron Hotel. Included on this list are the Presbyterian church at 300 North Washington with its semi-gothic architecture, its towers and the Tiffany windows. The Ladies Literary Club house was built in the 1840's and was the first structure in Ypsilanti included on the National Register of Historic Sites.

The only cobblestone house in Ypsilanti is located just across from the Historic Museum on Huron St. The first brick home in Ypsilanti, begun in 1830, still has the original bee-hive oven in the kitchen.

One could write on and on describing the houses listed on the walking tour. However, words cannot describe the beauty of some of the carvings on these homes, the variety of the architecture, and the multitude of uses to which these homes are now put. Try looking for yourself. Pick up the walking tour list and, then meander around the area.

The business district of Ypsilanti is included in the Historical District. The next time you drive down Pearl Street, notice the cut stone construction of Congdon's Ace Hardware store. On the right side of the street, note the GAR hall. The local chapter has used that building since its founding.

On Michigan, the Casa Nova was once a Mill and Haabs shows what can be done with the old store fronts.

Down in Depot Town the building which currently houses a moving company's warehouse will soon be a restaurant. Once Follett House, the largest hotel between Detroit and Chicago on the Michigan Central Railroad, the building will be Follett House again soon. The owner plans to open a restaurant bearing that name on the first floor of the building. Eventually banquet rooms will be available on the upper floors. Once the third floor housed a huge ballroom--maybe it will again.

This building housed the original City Hall and jail. It was the first building authorized by Ypsilanti's first City Council.

After walking around the downtown area, climb in your car and drive to the corner of Forest and River Streets where Hutchinson of Sperry and Hutchinson Green Stamps built his mansion. Currently owned by a pharmacist who lives there, much of the building is divided into apartments.

The Lewis House, 415 North Huron, is used today to house Eastern Michigan University Guests. When you drive by, notice the elaborate carving on the porch.

On the southern end of Summit Street (not in the Historical District) is a large yellow house with much white gingerbread trim. The trim was originally part of the Stroh Brewery exhibit at the Columbian Exhibition in Chicago.

Ypsilanti has a unique combination of types and kinds of architecture and with the leadership of the Historic District Study Committee, the citizens of this town founded in 1823 will preserve this heritage.

Serving on the study committee were Ms. Bird, chairman, Ms. Edmunds; Ward Swarts, Chief architect at Williamsburg who retired to Ypsilanti; Dorothy Disbrow, city archivist; Judge Robert Fink; Foster Fletcher, city historian; Eileen Harrison, retired reporter from the Ypsilanti Press; Ken Massingill, student at EMU who plans to settle in Ypsi; Lyndle Bullard and Mattie Dorsey.

Ypsilanti also boasts two octagon houses. One at 105 South Huron was built in 1854 as the home and offices of Helen Walker McAndrew, first woman physician in Washtenaw county. It featured a mineral bath clinic. The original building exists behind additions. Can you find the other Octagon house? It's not disguised in any way.

Why did Bob Elliot go to Arizona?

By Mike Pritula

Way out west in Arizona, the land of cactuses and sandboxes, a man named Fred Snowden is grinning from ear to ear a lot these days. In fact, he is smiling all the time.

Snowden, head basketball coach at the University of Arizona in Tuscon, has good reason to be happy. The first year coach has completed his initial campaign with Arizona and can not wait for next season to begin. Snowden shook up college basketball last season as he started three freshmen and knocked off some of the top teams in the country before finishing with one of the most successful Arizona basketball years ever.

But if Snowden's grin seems extra big then your eyes are not deceiving you. He has recruited a high school star that most local sports fans are very familiar with, and probably a player the rest of the nation will soon know all too well.

Robert Elliot, an all-A student and Ann Arbor resident all his life, will be attending the University of Arizona next year to study accounting and play basketball for Fred Snowden. Elliott is almost certainly the best basketball player to come out of Ann Arbor ever and he holds every major scoring and rebounding record in Ann Arbor Pioneer history.

The interesting thing about Elliot is the controversy surrounding his decision to go west while snubbing the school that was situated right in his own backyard. Many local alumni were miffed at the fact he had "deserted" his home town. Others were glad he chose not to have Johnny Orr as a coach. Most wished him success in his basketball future. But the truth is Bob Elliot had nothing against the U of M.

"It wasn't the fact I didn't like Michigan," remarked Elliot. "I would have gone here if I didn't find anyplace better."

Obviously Elliot found some place better in Tuscon, Arizona, a swinging desert town of 350,000. "There are two main reasons why I picked Arizona. One, the atmosphere of the town. I mean everything. The air, the scene, the people, the people are truthful in Tuscon. The people are great in Tucson. The second reason was the education. If you rated the University of Michigan in education, they would get an A+. If you rated Arizona, they would get an A-. The two schools were real close academically so I chose Arizona because of the atmosphere."

Elliot added it was tough to leave his home town because he likes Ann Arbor a lot and has enjoyed the people here. When asked if he had any comment on the U of M coaching staff Elliot replied, "Yeah, I wish them good luck."

The third choice on Elliot's list, and what a list he had to choose from...326 schools, was the University of Virginia. "I really liked the coaching staff down there, and Virginia is a great school academically. But the reason I ruled out Virginia was because of the people. I mean...maybe I can't dig the South, but those people just weren't for me. However, Virginia was my third choice."

From listening to Elliot talk about his decision to attend Arizona, it would seem to be that Fred Snowden played no big part in his recruiting. Ah, but everyone supposedly knows better. Actually, Elliot cited his parents as the biggest influencing factor. "My parents were definitely influencing, I listened to them."

Elliot never actually talked to John Wooden, although UCLA was one of the 326 schools after him. "UCLA sent one of their assistants who was Gary Cunningham. I was warming up for one of the (Lansing) Sexton games and there was this blue coat in the stands. Not an ordinary blue coat, but the kind that glows when you look at it; just like the UCLA uniforms. And I knew right away where the man was from. I said to myself--'Boy, you better look good now, or else'".

Elliot tossed an interesting point about the fact of his pursuing accounting as a field of study. "Arizona has a tremendous accounting program, and right now I am looking more towards accounting than pro basketball."

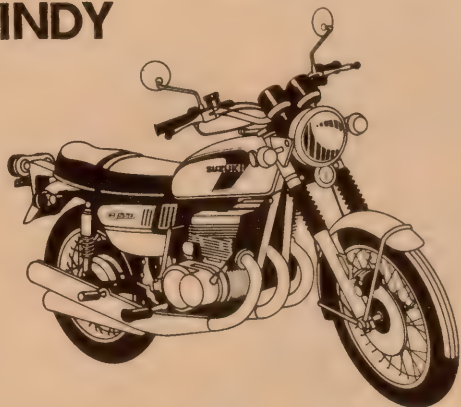

I'm going out there for the accounting education and not worrying about pro basketball."

Ann Arbor softball summary

By Mike Pritula

Here is an interesting fact: There are 118 softball teams playing in 10 assorted leagues in the Ann Arbor area alone, and that does not even include the women's teams. But that figure of 118 has about reached its peak according to Ann Arbor softball coordinator Stan Bidlack.

"We have run out of diamond space", remarked Bidlack. "There is no more room to put anymore teams. Every ball diamond in Ann Arbor is used every night of the week during the summer."

Bidlack commented that the programs of the "Major Leagues" are doing quite well, but claim most of the diamond space out at Veterans Park. The Majors are supposedly the best teams in both the fast pitch and slow pitch divisions. This year the major fast pitch league is comprised of six teams while the slow pitch majors are a ten team loop.

"We keep these leagues exclusive because we feel these should be the cream of the crop as far as Ann Arbor softball is concerned," added Bidlack. "Both these leagues play all their games, with one exception, at Vets park."

The game of slow pitch softball is fairly recent in comparison to how many years fast pitch has been around. But slow pitch is gaining in popularity and has already passed the fast pitch program in numbers. There are now 72 slow pitch teams compared to only 46 for the faster league.

"The growth in slow pitch has been phenomenal the past few years," Bidlack mentioned. "The popularity is due to the fact that it is a hitter's game and not as tough to play."

A hitters game it is. Slow pitch softball is quite an invention. The rule on pitching in slow pitch is that the ball must have at least a three foot arc and at the most a ten foot arc. Besides the ten teams in the majors, there are another 62 squads scattered in various "A" leagues on Monday thru Friday nights. Bidlack said that while the number of slow pitch teams increase, the number of fast pitch teams decrease.

There were 56 fast pitch teams last year compared with the 46 this year and an even lower drop is foreseen next year.

Some old time Ann Arbor residents may remember the thriving sport of fast pitch softball as it appeared back in the 1940's and 50's. Ancient Sportsman's Park was located on Stadium Blvd. where the Ponderosa Steak House and Zephyr businesses are now situated. Back then there was an admission charge to view the top fast pitch teams in action and this system worked out pretty well as a source of maintenance revenue.

Believe it or not, paying your way to see a softball game at Veterans Park may not be too far off in the future. The City of Ann Arbor is considering several proposals as far as ideas for raising money. The City would like to raise money to build more diamonds which would in turn relieve the overcrowding at the present diamonds.

Charging admission is one possible way. Bidlack mentioned that fencing in the entire Veterans complex and charging a quarter would be an effective way of collecting money. Certainly softball has shown in the past that enough people turn out for the sport and the program could easily pay for itself.

"Generally speaking, softball loses money every year," commented Bidlack. "If we could devise some method of erasing this deficit and concentrate on the construction of new diamonds, there is no telling how large the softball program could grow to."

Bidlack has had another problem come up just recently.

Chelsea merchants to hold Art Fair

A group of Chelsea merchants is expanding the annual "Sidewalk Sales" to include an Art Fair this year.

The event is to be called "Chelsea Sidewalk Festival," and is slated to be held August 10 and 11.

Plans for the Festival include special decorations and live music. An ice cream social or church supper are also possible activities.

Area artists are invited to participate in the Festival. Ten foot display areas will be assigned in a portion of the downtown district not used by the merchants. Only handmade articles may be displayed.

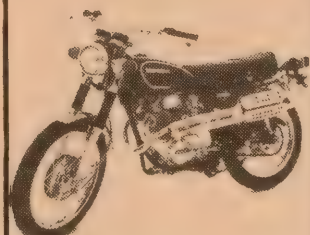

Artists are encouraged to demonstrate their craft, and are expected to be present to discuss their work.

There is an entry fee of $10.00. For further information contact Pat Ditmar, 475-2512.

The women are now demanding equal time and space for their program which has grown tremendously in the past three years. He has worked out a compromise which allows the women to use Veterans third diamond almost exclusively.

"Right now I am stuck between the slow pitch people who say they have waited long enough for good facilities and the women who are demanding good facilities right now," mused Bidlack. "Both groups seem satisfied at the moment."

Where is the Ann Arbor softball program going. Nobody knows for sure. But these things they do know: Slow pitch softball is on the go, fast pitch is dwindling. Women's softball is growing and the conflicts are sure to arise.

Horse shows: more confusing than Watergate

By Mike Pritula
 Reflections on attending a horse show:

A horse show is the most confusing sporting event to watch (that includes rugby and Watergate).

A horse show is full of all kinds of surprises (even some which are not nice).

The people try to be helpful, to no avail.

If planning to attend one, the best thing to do is sit back and don't worry about what is unfolding before your eyes (it isn't worth the trouble).

There you have it. A common man's reaction to a unique gathering that is known as "a horse show". If that does not help the picture any better, you will just have to go see for yourself. Enjoy an afternoon, an unusual afternoon, in the country next year about this time by going to see the Waterloo Hunt Club Horse Show. Maybe it will serve to enlighten your idea of the horse show.

However, last week at the Waterloo Hunt club the organization held their annual show that is part of a circuit known as "the big four".

The other three shows being the Grosse Point, Detroit, and Metamore events. Many local horsemen from the Washtenaw County area attend these shows with hopes of qualifying for the nationals held in Madison Square Garden late this summer. Needless to say, most of them have their hopes dashed as only a select few qualify.

Two girls from Ann Arbor, Sue Vanderhyden and Pam Hamlin, have already earned enough first place ratings to allow them to make the scene at the Garden. To qualify a rider must gain two first places in sanctioned shows of which the Big Four are part. The odds are against all the riders as up to 108 competitors have been entering the certain events.

The pair from Ann Arbor had already qualified before the Waterloo Show and were competing anyway to keep in top form. Other local riders still had shots had qualifying if they could capture another first place.

Untangling the maddening areas of Horse Shows is quite a task but as one spectator put it, "nobody is really interested except the fanatic horse enthusiasts; and they already know all about the different events."

That may be true, but this writer is willing to take a crack at deciphering the world of horse events. Hopefully, someone, somewhere, will understand it.

The two main "classes" in horse shows are Hunters and Jumper. Hunter is basically based on style, how the horse and rider look and act. Jumper deals with more concrete and measurable variables such as time and height. This class will take into account the time needed for a horse to circle the course and the number of faults. The scoring of faults we will get to in just a minute.

It gets a bit confusing as both these classes contain a totally separate event known as "equitation." In equitation it is the rider, and not the horse which is judged. If it is a jumping course, it does not matter how many obstacles are knocked down by the horse as long as the rider maintains his or her poise and looks. Equitation in Hunter is based on such things as how the rider is able to ride smoothly and effortlessly.

Remembering that Hunter is purely style, just the horse is judged. On his jumps and turns, the horse

Antiques

"I've always liked history and going to museum, even when I was a little kid," he said, "I would be looking at something in some museum and think to myself 'Boy, I wish this thing could talk. I bet it could really tell me a tale or two.'"

When asked why people collected antiques, Clara answered, "People collect for investment and beauty or to have something no one else has. Many people will collect just one thing - like bells or dolls or bottles - while many others just look for a good buy or what seems beautiful to them."

According to the Spencers, nothing of antique value has ever gone down in market price. "If I had to pick an average percentage figure of the value increase of antiques or collectable items, I would say it would be somewhere in the range of 10 to 15 per cent increase each year," Clara explained. "Of course there are things like furniture and art glass that are increasing even more than that," Sam added.

The Spencers consider lower Michigan to be the best place in the country to buy antiques. "But the area doesn't always matter," Sam explained. "If you look long and far enough you will always find a good buy or something you want. Then again, it is not always a question of where you buy, but now you do your buying."

More Than Meets The Eye

No dealer can ever know all there is to know about all antiques. That's why you will find the most active buying and selling among dealers. One will know of a market of the value of certain items that the other is ignorant of, then maybe the next month, the roles will be reversed. You have just got to keep up with it all if you want to stay in business," Sam continued.

"You have got to know your antiques, and once you do, you have to read more. But before you buy, you handle it, feel it, look at it, study it under different lights and angles. You just can't be too careful when you are buying an expensive antique," he said.

Sam also warned, "Experience and common sense play an important part in buying and selling. Once I bought a beautiful cut-glass vase. When I got home, I found that it had a chip, under the price tag."

The Spencers say that many antique shops are started and then fold after a year or two because the dealers just didn't know enough about antiques. "Many times they are fooled on a piece and then end up stuck with it. That is, unless they can pass it off onto someone else," Sam smiled. "They will, or should, always stand behind what they sell as being what they claim it to be."

Although the antique business is often tiring, neither Sam nor Clara have any thought of giving it up.

Their one big dream is to own a large antique store where they can display everything in style. For them the past is very much their present and future.

Clara and Sam pride themselves on their dependability, noting, "we may make a mistake, but so could anyone. If we do, we are always more than willing to do right. If we tried to pull the wool over anyone's eyes, we just wouldn't be able to live with ourselves."

The couple will also testify that antique dealing is hard work. Seven days a week, and sometimes at night, the Spencers open their house to perspective buyers or are out buying items themselves. "You have got to like people," Clara said, because most of them will ask a million questions and you end up eating a lot of cold meals."

"Besides you never really know when a particular antique will sell unless you already have a perspective buyer," she continued. "An antique has got to be wanted by the right person, he has got to have a place or use for it, and of course he has to have the money to pay for it."

Among the rare antiques owned by the Spencers include a Regina Hexaphone, worth about $2,000 dollars. This is an old time juke box made about 1890, in perfect working condition. They also have a musical orchestra, made in France, which many museums are after. A Handel presentation lamp is also in their collection.

Clar's greatest interest is glass, while Sam specializes in trains and guns. Both do a lot of reading and research in the antique field and have quite a library of books on every subject from clocks to signed marks."

"It is easier today to identify an antique than it was 15 or 20 years ago," Clara said. "Then, there wasn't much written about antiques and you almost had to rely on your own judgement. Today, there are not many items that can't be found in some book. If it is that rare that it can't be found, then there really can't be any set price attached to it. It is usually whatever the seller wants or what the buyer is willing to pay for it."

A Good Investment

According to Sam, they have had to pay top dollar on many antiques.

"We knew that it would only be a matter of time before they increased in value, so we would just hang onto them till the price went up," he added.

The Spencers claim that there are certain antiques which cannot be bought at any price. "I have some too," Sam said. "Sometimes that is the only way to get other priceless items you want more than the ones you've got. You are forced to trade."

The Spencers have even started their youngest son, Biff, on collecting antiques. At 16 years old, he already has acquired 22 complete old train sets and a sizeable collection of old cap pistols.

THE FIAT 128 FOUR-DOOR SEDAN BRINGS YOU GOOD NEWS FOR YOUR KNEES.

The trouble with most small sedans is that while they help solve the serious problems of space on the road, they create serious problems of space inside the car.

One of the most remarkable things about the front-wheel drive Fiat 128 you see pictured above is that, while on the outside it's 8 inches shorter than the Volkswagen Beetle, on the inside it borders on the cavernous.

For example, in the front, you get 2 inches more legroom than you get in the slightly more expensive Cadillac Eldorado, not to mention more hip room than a Toyota Corona or a Dodge Colt.

And in the back, where small cars are really small, you get 3 inches more legroom than a Buick Riviera—a car 6 feet longer—and more room to get in and out of the back door than any four-door sedan we know of.

All of which is one of the big reasons why, in Europe, where the average family averages more people than in America, they buy more Fiats than any other car.
